

TIE Case File 104b - supplemental diagnostic report

Submitted by: Leah DeWitt, Ship Engineer

I know I owe y'all a Mission Log for our adventures with Michelangelo, but I've been doing too much playing around with the black box from the mission I didn't go on...

I found that the black box shows that the ship spontaneously changed its directory - some sort of virus that was set to go off at a the right time and place. When it was done, it deleted records from the hard drive. Looking further into it, there were some sophisticated sub-routines that were used, but I couldn't put a finger on them exactly. They may have come from a similar place as the explosive coin transmitter, but I don't have any more information that than for y'all.

Oh wait, I do! I reviewed DASCAs log for that temporal activity you picked up. Not that it's exciting or nothin', but it was likely another ship - but I don't know whose.
